Describe how catching exceptions can help with file errors. Write three Python examples that actually generate file errors on your computer and catch the errors with try: except: blocks. Include the code and output for each example in your post.

Describe how you might deal with each error if you were writing a large production program. These descriptions should be general ideas in English, not the actual Python code.